

but her steps were insecure and there was a stagger in her gait.

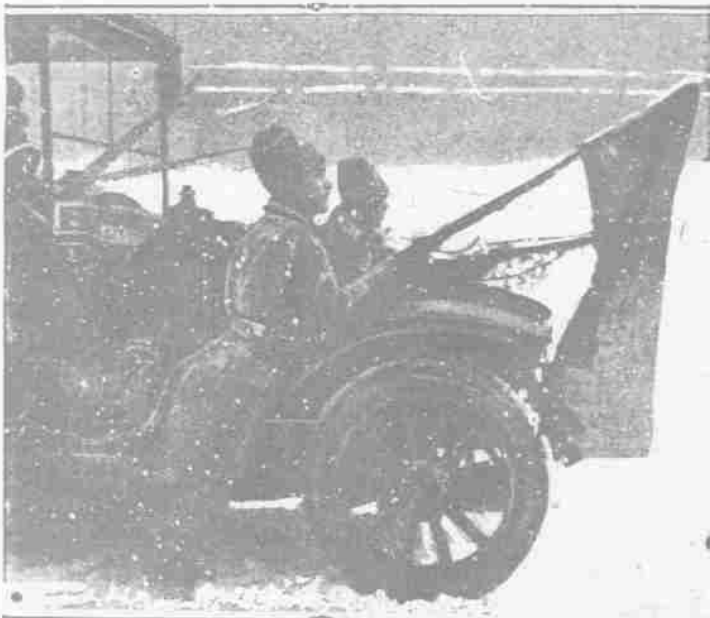

"She's stewed!" exclaimed Ass't State's Att'y Michael Rosinia.

The judge thought as much. He told Miss Crawford to sober up and come back today, prepared to give any reason she might have as to why she should not be sent to the Bridewell for six months—not for being drunk, or for contempt of court, but for larceny—stealing a husband's love.

"I am going to start sending affinities to jail," said Stelk. "It will make no difference whether they are men or women. They have no place in the social structure. They are criminals, violators of moral and statute law."

"I would like to put them in solitary confinement, so they might, perhaps, get a meager knowledge of the suffering they caused someone who was left alone when they charmed a husband or wife away."

REVOLUTIONISTS USE AUTOS AND RED FLAGS IN FREEDOM FIGHT

Revolting Russian soldiers introduced a new way of fighting when czarism was overthrown. Kneeling on the running board of the auto, bayonets fixed, and one flying the red flag of the revolutionists from his bayonet, they were driven forward into the ranks of the loyal troops,
